A few years ago, I went to Disneyland with my sister and her two children. At that time, they were probably 10 and 8.

We were walking down Main Street to go across to Downtown Disney when John, the younger of my two nephews, 29 walking. He stood there for a few seconds with his eyes looking across the 30. As I started to walk towards him to tell him to 31 so we could stay with the group, he started walking across the street.

I was just standing there thinking and trying to 32 what he would do. 33 he got to the other side of the street, he stopped in front of a couple and their crying child. If I had to guess, this kid was probably around the same 34 as John, if not a little bit younger.

I saw them talking to each other for a moment, then John 35 his balloon that he had just got within 10 minutes to the kid. The parents looked absolutely 36. The kid took the balloon, stopped 37, smiled at John and said something to him.

Then John came walking back over to me, totally 38. The parents were still watching him as if he was a miracle(神奇的人). And the kid was smiling and talking 39 to his parents, pointing at my nephew. By the time he got back over to me, I was obviously confused. So I asked him, “What was that about?”

John answered calmly, “He looked sad. He shouldn’t be 40 at Disneyland, so I gave him my 41 to make him happy.”

Then I asked, “You gave him your balloon?”

“Yes. His balloon might have flown away, or he didn’t get one, 42 mom bought me lots of toys, so it’s OK.” he answered.

To me, it’s hard to imagine that this kid, this 8-year-old kid, did that.

The story is definitely not as 43 as some of the other stories we have ever read, but to this day it still kind of blows me away.

Ungraded question, posted by Instructor, Dr. Green

In next week's lecture, we will be discussing identity. Social experts suggest that we have three basic types of identity. First, your given identity includes your gender(性别), your birthplace, and your age. These are aspects of identity that are almost impossible to change. Second is your chosen identity, groups you choose to become a part of. Chosen identity can include your beliefs, your professions(职业), or your community organizations. Finally, your core identity is what makes you unique. Your behaviors, personality, values, and skills are all part of your core identity. Before Monday's lecture, post a short reply to this question.

QUESTION: How has your identity changed in the last few years, including the three aspects of identity?

Posted by Ali K.

When I started high school, I thought that I knew exactly who I was and where I was headed. I was a star soccer player, and my entire identity was soccer—I lived it and breathed it. This was my chosen identity. Everything changed when I had a terrible knee injury during my second year. After several months, it was clear that I wouldn't be able to play soccer competitively again. I felt really sad when I had to quit the team, and I was very unhappy. Slowly I started to see that I was still the same person on the inside. I was still a very hard-working person, someone who didn't easily give up, and someone who loved being on a team. These were part of my core identity. I had to rediscover my values (hard work and competition) to get me through this hard time. I've been developing a new sense of identity. Although I've had to change part of my chosen identity, I now understand that my core identity (who I am inside) is the most important for me.

Like Ali, I had a very hard time in high school. I felt like my parents didn't understand or respect me, and nothing I did was right in their eyes. ①They didn't think I was trustworthy, and I admit that sometimes I didn't make great choices. But my parents are part of my given identity, and therefore they are very important in my life. During high school, my chosen identity was the group of friends that I belonged to. ②However, some friends were influencing me in bad ways. I felt really lost and unhappy with my life. Later, when I started at the university in my city, I decided to find some new friends.③ Now I can realize the changes in me and feel more comfortable around my parents because they respect me as an adult. ④It is important to remember that your chosen identity is not who you are. You can make other choices, and change your life.

50. Which of the following belongs to your given identity?

- A. Professions. B. Behaviors. C. Personality. D. Birthplace.

51. Why did Ali change part of his chosen identity?

- A. He lost interest in sport at school.
B. He found a new sense of identity.
C. He injured his knee playing soccer.
D. He followed his teammates' advice.

52. Where should the following sentence be put?

“I've connected with friends who better understand my family background and my values.”

- A. ① B. ② C. ③ D. ④

第二节：阅读短文，完成下列任务。（共 8 小题，12 分）

D

This morning we had our oral examinations. At 8:00 we were all in the schoolroom, and at 8:15 they began to call us, four at a time, into the big hall, where there was a large table covered with a green cloth; round it were seated the head-master and four other teachers, among them our own teacher. I was one of the first called out. Poor teacher! You are really fond of us! While they were asking questions, he had no eyes for anyone but us. He was troubled when we were not sure of our answers; he grew calm when we gave a fine answer; he heard everything, and made us a thousand signs with his hand and head to say to us, “Good!—No!—Pay attention!—Slower!—Courage!”

He would have suggested everything to us, if he had been able to talk. And when the other teachers said to me, “That is well; you may go,” his eyes beamed with happiness.

I returned at once to the schoolroom to wait for my father. Nearly all were still there. At that moment our teacher entered in a hurry, with a red face, and said, in a low, quick and joyful voice, “Good, all is going well now, let the rest come forwards! Boys, courage! I am extremely satisfied.” And, in order to exhilarate us, as he went out, he made a motion of stumbled(绊倒) on purpose. It appeared so strange that all smiled.

Seeing that act of childish joy, I had a mixed feeling of pain and tenderness. All his reward was that moment of cheerfulness, —it was the compensation for nine months of kindness, patience, and even sorrow! For that he had worked hard so long; for that he had so often gone to give lessons to a sick boy, poor teacher! That and nothing more was what he demanded of us, in exchange for so much love and so much care!

And, now, it seems to me that I shall always see him in the performance of that act, when I recall him through many years; and when I have become a man, he will still be alive, and we shall meet, and I will tell him about that deed which touched my heart; and I will give him a kiss on his white head.

第二节 短文写作 (共15分)

Possible version:

Dear Jack,

How's everything going?

I'm excited to tell you that I've joined a Chinese painting club in our school this term. Members of our club meet once a week. We have different activities and I enjoy all of them. We've invited some well-known painters to the club to talk about the history of Chinese painting, and to teach us the basic techniques of drawing. At the weekend, we go to visit art galleries, where we study the masterpieces of famous artists and discuss how we understand them. Of course, we practice painting whenever we can spare some time.

I'm so proud of myself that now I understand Chinese painting a lot better, and I've learned how to draw. I love Chinese painting.

Best regards,

Li Hua
