阅读下面短文, 掌握其大意, 从每题所给的 A、B、C、D 四个选项中, 选出最佳选项, 并在答题卡上将该项涂黑。

It was like any other mid-September day. I was teaching maths, like I did each day at 10:00 a.m.. Students were busy working on the 17 I asked. All you could 18 was the sound of pencil tips tapping the desks.

“Boys and girls, eyes up here please.” As expected, students focused on 19. “I need a volunteer to write the answer on the board.” A silent sea of 20 shot up into the air. I quickly looked at the hands raised, and then 21 my eyes on one hand in particular, a hand different from the rest, John Doe’s hand.

John was a little boy with Cerebral Palsy(脑瘫). His balance was shaky and he could easily be 22. His body was very rigid(僵硬的) and his movements were never smooth. His writing was at most times unreadable, and speaking was difficult for him. Everything was a(n) 23 for John.

However, John loved 24 and would come every day with a smile on his face. His determination to succeed was remarkable for a(n) 25 so young who was facing so many difficulties in his daily life.

Getting back to the maths lesson, students were waiting to be called. One of those 26 hands was John’s.

“John, come on up and answer the question.” I called.

He got out of his seat 27 and walked to the front. His moving was awkward(笨拙的) and with each shaky step, he looked as if the slightest misstep could lead to him falling over. All 28 were on him. The class was 29. He made it up to the board after spending so much energy to get there. As I gave him the chalk I thought to myself, “What have I just done?”

Did I set him up to 30? What if he gives a wrong answer?" I was getting really 31.

Grasping the chalk and with great 32, he wrote down the answer, which looked as if a kindergartener wrote it, but was at least 33. Immediately a sense of 34 overcame me. "Excellent job! John Doe, you are right!" I said 35.

At that very moment, spontaneous(自发的)clapping for him broke the silence of the entire class. John stood there, smiling the biggest smile. He was admired for his strong 36.

That moment left an unforgettable mark on my heart.

第二部分：阅读理解（共 17 小题，34 分）

第一节（共 12 小题；每小题 2 分，24 分）

阅读下列短文，从每题所给的 A、B、C、D 四个选项中，选出最佳选项。并在答题卡上将该项涂黑。

on the booking. Once I heard the name, I immediately realized who was standing in front of me.

I had been learning for two weeks how to say: "Welcome to Ireland. My sign language is terrible, but please, if you need anything during your stay, just let me know and we will help you."

I smiled at the father and daughter in front of me. Turning to the father, I greeted him in ASL (American Sign Language) and began the bit I had learned for him. His daughter broke down crying and told me I was sweet. But the father just smiled and was so happy. Honestly, seeing his reaction was enough for me. It was absolutely worth the last few weeks of learning basic ASL.

Sadly, I wasn't working the day they checked out, but they left a gift for me, a small box with some chocolates and a book on ASL. Inside was a note saying: "Thank you very much for what you did. My father has been in amazing spirits from the time you checked us in and insisted we get you a gift before we left. You have no idea how much this meant to my father and me, and we can't thank you enough. You've made his trip very special with one simple gesture."

I cried for a solid five minutes when I came into work the next day and found this gift in my locker.

Is traffic a big problem where you live? Increased cycling may be the answer. Where are the best places to live and cycle? A new report lists the best bike-friendly cities around the world.

Top of the list is Amsterdam, the bike capital of the world. An incredible 40% of all traffic movements are by bicycle. There's an extensive network of safe, fast and comfortable cycle routes. Copenhagen, the city of bikes, is a city where 32% of workers cycle to work because it's fast and easy. Berlin is another European city that's great for cycling. The city has about 80 kilometers of bike lanes, and 50 kilometers of pavement paths. Cycling accounts for 12% of total street traffic.

Barcelona has been praised for its cycle service "Bicing". This was introduced in March 2007. It's a bicycle service that allows users to take bicycles from any of the 100 stations spread around the city. Later, they can leave them at any other bike station inside the urban area of the city. The city has created a "green ring" that surrounds the city area of Barcelona with a bike path. There are 3,250 parking spaces for bikes at street level at present. Barcelona City is also building a new underground car park for bicycles.

The UK has its cycle-friendly cities too. Bristol is the birthplace of "Sustrans"—the cycle-route charity which was formed 30 years ago. One of their projects was turning an old rail line between Bristol and Bath into a bike route. Other bike-friendly cities in the UK include Cambridge and York. Cambridge is an old city but has still managed to build good cycle infrastructure(基础设施), and cyclists are considered at every stage of any new developments.

Bicycle is a most popular means of transportation in China. Nowadays, riding a bicycle is also a good way to support low-carbon living. Beijing can be one of the best bike-friendly cities in China. There are many riding routes in Beijing for outdoor-lovers to explore. Cyclists can get close enough to experience the history and culture of Beijing, including the Forbidden City, Drum Tower, the Water Cube, the Bird's Nest, Hutong etc.

45. In Amsterdam, traffic movements by bicycle account for _____.

- A. 80%
- B. 40%
- C. 32%
- D. 12%

46. What do we know about "Bicing" in Barcelona?

- A. There are 100 bike stations spread around the city.
- B. Cyclists can leave their bikes anywhere in the city.
- C. There were 3,250 parking spaces for bikes in 2007.
- D. Underground bike parking stations are everywhere.

47. A rail line was changed to a bike route in _____

A. Bristol

B. Cambridge

C. York

D. Beijing

48. What is the passage mainly about?

A. The history of cycling.

B. The best cities for cycling.

C. The development of cycling.

D. The rules for cycling.
