Despite Ecuador's tough protection, there have been many giant tortoises (陆龟) killed recently, probably for their meat for financial gains made by wildlife hunters.

For a century, Ecuador's beautiful and endangered giant tortoises have been protected. Hunting the tortoise is illegal under Ecuador's laws. These species, living on the Galápagos Islands, are one of the largest living reptiles (爬行动物) with the longest life span of all vertebrates. The oldest tortoise on record was 175 years old.

"This isn't a solitary incident," the Galápagos Conservancy, a US-based conservation organization said. "In September 2021, the remains of 15 other endangered giant tortoises were found on Isabela. The reptiles had likely been hunted for consumption."

The islands are located around 600 miles off the shore of Ecuador's coast, in the Pacific Ocean. The archipelago (群岛) is considered one of the world's best places to see wildlife, and it is home to animal and plant species that are found nowhere else in the world.

Their famously fearless wildlife is believed to have been a source of inspiration for Darwin's theory of evolution, following his visit to the islands in 1835. The islands were actually discovered by accident in 1535 when a Spanish ship was blown off course while sailing from Panama to Peru. Ironically enough, the ship's captain was unimpressed by the islands, writing to the king that they were "worthless". That view, of course, changed over time. Now about 25,000 people live in the four inhabited islands of Santa Cruz, Isabela, San Cristóbal, and Floreana.

There were once at least 250,000 giant tortoises on the islands; there are fewer than 15,000 in the wild today—and two subspecies are already extinct. "Evidence from the 2021 investigation showed that the reptiles had likely been hunted for consumption," Galápagos Conservancy continued. "Many are worried the population will continue to decrease if serious action isn't taken soon. We must safeguard giant tortoises and the ecosystems they depend on."

28. What made Ecuador's giant tortoises endangered according to the text?

- B. People living on the archipelago.
- C. The sailing from Panama to Peru.
- D. The discovery of the archipelago.

31. What does the author want to express in the last paragraph?

Raising livestock (牲畜) is a big part of the carbon emission from agriculture. But it is hard to change people's habits and get them to give up their hamburgers, especially since more than one-third of Americans eat fast food every day. We previously called for carbon labels on everything from buildings to burgers. Now, a new study from the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health found that labels on fast food affected people's choices.

The study said shifting current dietary patterns to more sustainable diets with less red meat could reduce food-related greenhouse gas emissions by 55% and have health benefits.

The 5,000 participants in the study were shown fake menus. One group got menus with high climate impact labels on red meat items and another had low climate impact labels on fish and plant-based burgers. Both menus were effective in reducing the orders for red meat, but interestingly, the high-impact labels were far more effective, with 23% of the participants choosing a more environmentally sustainable selection, while menus listing low-impact choices encouraged only 10% participants to change.

"We found that labeling red meat items with high-climate impact labels was more effective in increasing sustainable selections than labeling non-red meat items with low-climate impact labels," wrote the authors of the study.

Lead author, Julia Wolfson, said, "These results suggest that menu labeling, particularly labels warning that an item has high climate impact, can be an effective strategy for encouraging more sustainable food choices in a fast food setting."

The study points out negative labels might be unpopular: "It is unlikely that the industry would voluntarily adopt a negative label approach; such an approach needs to be carried out by law. However, high climate impact labels may easily be adopted in settings like universities and hospitals."

They have a point that this label is aggressively negative, more like a cigarette warning on a food label. In the study, the authors note that future research should test more label designs using qualitative and quantitative research on how people understand different climate impact labels.

What is paragraph 1 mainly about?

第二节 (共 5 小题; 每小题 2.5 分, 满分 12.5 分)

阅读下面短文, 从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

When the sun goes down in the evening and you are sitting outside at home, you may not be able to see many flowers in the yard without artificial lighting. 36. That is the one you can enjoy by the light of the moon.

37

The plants with silver or multi-colored leaves, white or light-colored flowers, or flowers that open only at night are good choices for a moon garden. Another way to enjoy plants in the evening is to choose ones with a pleasing smell. Plant them along a walkway or near a seating area outdoors, where you can enjoy them up close, or within view of a window.

Select plants depending on season or temperature

You can begin the garden early with early bloomers, like lily of the valley. Make the season last longer into the autumn with late bloomers like chrysanthemum. In very warm places, try planting frangipani to fill your evenings with pleasure. 38.

Group your plants together

For the best visual effect, plant in groups of three, five or seven of the same kind of plant. That is a good gardening method in general because it avoids creating a disorganized mixture of plants and flowers. But it is more important in a moon garden. 39.

Add some small lights

There is one more thing to increase how much you can see your moon garden—add some small lights that face the plants. 40. Think about using other light-colored design elements as well, such as fencing, plant supports, stones, water features and glass balls.

- A. Insects that visit flowers at night love them
- B. Plant some plants that show well in moonlight
- C. They will increase the appeal of your moon garden
- D. However, with some planning, you can have a moon garden
- E. You certainly don't want your single plants to get lost in the dark
- F. Find the plants that work best in your climate by talking with a local expert
- G. These plants can be seen after sunset and especially shine under a full moon

One day before the last Christmas, my wife, Charlotte, was busy decorating our Christmas tree. I reached for my 41 to capture the tree. After only a couple of minutes, I started complaining, "I can't make the 42 right. I wish Sophie were here telling me what to do. I miss her."

Several months before, my daughter, Sophie, had gone to New York. She was not there to give me 43. Charlotte was working in silence while I clicked and 44. The morning after that day, I got up a little earlier. I plugged in the 50, and turned towards the tree and stood in silence. In the semidarkness, the Christmas tree was 51 like a diamond.

At that time, I realized I was 52. My wife had decorated the tree 53. It was magical and came 54 in the morning light. The tree drew my eyes, reminding me to be grateful to those around me and look for the beauty 55 in life.

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Thomas and John have a lot in common. They are both talented high school seniors. They both love basketball. They are both captains of their respective high school basketball teams. But on one Saturday night in February, they were forever linked in the minds of all who were present for a mutual act of courage, sportsmanship (体育精神) and respect.

The remarkable moment came during a game between Thomas's small town Illinois team and John's big city team in Wisconsin—a game that almost wasn't played. Just days before the game, John's mother lost her five-year battle with cancer. Her death was sudden and painful for all who knew her.

John's coach wanted to cancel the game, but John insisted that the game should be played. So with heavy hearts, his teammates prepared to honor their captain's wishes and play without him.

What they weren't prepared for was John's appearance in the gym mid-way through the first half. As soon as the coach saw John, he called a time out, and players and fans surrounded the young man to offer love and support.

The coach asked him if he wanted to sit on the bench with the team. "No," John said. "I want to play." Of course his team was excited to have him. But because John wasn't on the pre-game roster (候选名单), putting him in the game at that point would result in a technical foul (犯规) and two free throws for the opposing team.

However, John's coach agreed with that. He could see that this was the teenager's way of coping with his loss. He thought the points didn't matter. The opposing team understood the situation and told the referees to let John play and forget the technical foul. The referees argued that a rule is a rule, and the free throws would have to be taken before the game could proceed. For possibly the first time in basketball history, referees had to force a team to accept and take the technical free throws.
