- A. $ 30 B. $ 47 C. $ 60 D. $ 77
23. What is the text?
- A. Financial statements B. Entrance regulations.
C. Registration instructions. D. Experimental procedures.

B

Chris Smith looked like any other young boy in his class: thick hair, a wide smile, and playing sports. By all appearances, life for Chris was the same as it was for a hundred other boys in the small town where he grew up, except for the constant evictions(驱赶), and eventually being homeless.

Chris' father was reckless(鲁莽的) with finances and dishonest in business. His mother tried her best to run the home until Chris' little brother drowned(溺亡), then his father went to prison, and finally the family fell apart.

"My mom shut down emotionally. Everything got worse," Chris remembers. Then she was gone and ran away from home without telling Chris. He did the best he could, sleeping on his newly married sister's sofa. "They didn't have much money, and I know it was a burden to take me in at 17 years old. I was going to drop out from high school and make it on my own."

But Chris' history teacher had different ideas. When Chris' study began to go down, she cornered him. "You're the smartest kid in the class," she told him. "If you don't graduate, you're going to regret it."

"School was my safe place," Chris says. School also offered him heat and food. It became the closest thing to home he could find, compared to his father's old truck that became his bed and his study space. He remembers his hair freezing onto the window in the winter.

When graduation came, Chris earned a full scholarship to college and graduated in the top 10 of his class. When it's time to apply for medical residencies, Chris set his sights high. He applied for residencies around the country and included the No. 1 program in the nation: Johns Hopkins. And then the letter came. Chris was in.

"I didn't really think I had a chance. But I had learned to give everything my best shot. Life is never fair. But if you don't give up, you will give yourself a better chance to make it," Chris says.

24. Why did Chris' mother leave home?

A. Because of failure in business.

B. Because of financial restrictions.

C. Because of her husband's dishonesty.

D. Because of heartbroken family events.

25. How's Chris' life and study during senior high school?

A. Lazy and average.

B. Comfortable and carefree.

C. Tough and hardworking.

D. Happy and undemanding.

26. What's Chris' philosophy?

A. Never lose heart.

B. Always be well-prepared.

C. Never judge a book by its cover.

D. Always be humble and cautious.

27. Which of the following can be a suitable title for the text?

A. Doing Is Better than Saying

B. There Is No End to Learning

C. From Homeless to Medical Resident

D. Great Hopes Make Great Man

C

Under a midday summer sun in California's Sacramento Valley, rice farmer Peter Rystrom walks across a dusty and bare plot of land, dry soil crunching(碎裂) beneath each step. In a typical year, he'd be walking across green rice fields in inches of water. But today the soil is dry and baking in the 35°C heat. It hasn't rained for 4 weeks in a row.

"Climate change is expected to worsen the state's extreme swings in rainfall," researchers reported in Nature Climate Change in 2018. Low water levels in rivers have forced farmers like Rystrom, whose family has been growing rice on this land for four generations, to reduce their water use.

"If we lose our rice crops, we have to deal with severe food crisis. Climate change is already threatening rice-growing regions around the world. This is not a future problem. This is happening now," says plant geneticist Pamela Ronald of the University of California, Davis, who identifies genes in rice that help the plant stand up to dryness, disease, flood, etc.

To save and even boost production, rice growers, engineers and researchers have turned to water-saving irrigation(灌溉) routines. Building canal systems and reservoirs(水库) can help farmers dampen their fields. But for some, the solution to rice's climate-related problems lies in enhancing the plant itself. They hold that establishing rice gene banks that store hundreds of thousands of rice varieties ready to be bred into new, dryness-tolerant varieties is more practical and effective. Solutions may be hidden in the DNA of those older breeds.

Three decades have passed since its initial development, and some researchers are looking beyond the genetic variability preserved in rice gene banks, searching instead for useful genes from other species, including plants and bacteria. But picking genes from one species and putting them into another, or genetic recombination, remains debatable. The most famous example of genetically changed rice is Golden Rice (GR). "Looking ahead, it will be crucial for countries to embrace GR rice. But it will take time," says Ismail, principal scientist at IRRI.

28. What problem does Kystrom have to deal with?
A. Thirst. B. Drought. C. Hot sun. D. Dusty weather.
29. What can be inferred from Para. 3?
A. Downtrend of rice-growing areas is severe now.
B. Climate change is a threatening factor in the future.
C. Humans will face starvation if crop failure happens.
D. Food crisis is a common occurrence around the world.
30. What's the purpose of setting up gene banks?
A. To store as many seeds as possible.
B. To cultivate climate-adapted varieties.
C. To improve the efficiency of breeding.
D. To show the technology of gene mapping.
31. What's Ismail's opinion about GR?
A. Favourable. B. Impractical. C. Disapproving. D. Insecure.

D

The measurement of blood pressure goes back almost three centuries, leading to the procedure that we all know and that our family doctor performs when we have checkups: A cuff (袖口) goes around our arm, which is first inflated (膨胀), and then deflated (放气), in a controlled manner, to determine our maximum and minimum blood pressure.

But the use of inflatable-cuff blood pressure monitors has some disadvantages. For one thing, unless people have home monitors, they must go to a chemistry shop, doctor's office or health center to learn what their blood pressure is. Another barrier is that repeated inflation and deflation of the cuff can cause difficulties when, for example, a patient is in the hospital and needs frequent blood pressure monitoring. And the last one is that since cuffs don't allow continuous measurement of blood pressure, they're only providing a measurement at a specific moment.

Today, a new generation of blood pressure devices have been developed and their aim is to make it easier to judge high blood pressure. Unlike traditional devices, they do without the arm cuff and offer blood pressure values on demand. Users just press their finger on a sensor on a watch and ring.

The various cuffless measuring devices are based on methods that, instead of directly determining blood pressure, use sensors to capture various indirect signals. These signals are processed by different sets of mathematical procedures to obtain the blood pressure values. It is like inferring fever by measuring an increase in heart beat and sweating instead of using a thermometer (体温表), or divining the result of a soccer match from outside the stadium by listening to the screams of the soccer fans.

The development of devices for measuring blood pressure without a blood pressure cuff is progressing rapidly, but that doesn't mean they are ready used to make diagnostic and treatment decisions. "The road to clinical application may be some day in the near future, but not now," Avolio says.

32. How many drawbacks of inflatable-cuff blood pressure monitors are there in the text?
A. Two. B. Three. C. Four. D. Five.

33. Which word can replace the underline word in Para. 4?
 A. changing. B. describing. C. guessing. D. remembering.
34. What's the fourth paragraph mainly about?
 A. The working principle of cuffless measuring devices.
 B. The different methods for setting mathematical procedures.
 C. The way of cuffless measuring devices to measure indirect signals.
 D. The connection between inferring fever and measuring blood pressure.
35. What will the writer most probably talk about on cuffless measuring devices next?
 A. The issue of mass-producing them.
 B. The processing techniques of them.
 C. The competitive intensity among their producers.
 D. The reasons for them not being used in the medical world currently.

第二节(共5小题;每小题2.5分,满分12.5分)

根据短文内容,从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Summarizing, or writing a summary, means giving a brief overview of a text's main points in your own words. For example, when you're writing an academic text like an essay, a research paper, or a dissertation(学位论文), you'll integrate sources in a variety of ways. 36 But it's often appropriate to sum up a whole article or chapter if it is especially relevant to your own research. Here are some key steps that can help you to do it:

Step 1: Read the text.

You should read the article more than once to make sure you've thoroughly understood it. It's often effective to read in three stages:

◆ 37

- ◆ Read the article carefully, highlighting important points and taking notes as you read.
- ◆ Skim the article again to confirm you've understood the key points, and reread any particularly important or difficult passages.

Step 2: Break the text down into sections.

38 If the text is a scientific paper, it is probably already organized into clearly marked sections, usually including an introduction, methods, results, and discussion. But most articles and essays will be structured around a series of sub-points or themes.

Step 3: Identify the key points in each section.

Now it's time to go through each section and pick out its most important points. Keep in mind that a summary does not involve paraphrasing(改述) every single paragraph of the article. 39

Step 4: Write the summary.

Now that you know the key points that the article aims to communicate, you need to put them in your own words. To avoid plagiarism(抄袭) and show you've understood the article, it's essential to properly paraphrase the author's ideas.

Step 5: 40

Finally, read through the article once more to ensure that:

- ◆ You've accurately represented the author's work.
 - ◆ You haven't missed any essential information.
 - ◆ The phrasing is not too similar to any sentences in the original.
- A. Boil the summary down further.
 B. Check the summary against the article.
 C. You might use a brief quote to support your point.
 D. Scan the article quickly to get a sense of its topic and overall shape.
 E. Your goal is to select the essential points, leaving out background information or details.
 F. To make the text more manageable and understand its sub-points, divide it into smaller parts.
 G. In any case, the goal of summarizing is to give your reader a clear understanding of the original source.

第二节(共 10 小题;每小题 1.5 分,满分 15 分)

阅读下面短文,在空白处填入 1 个适当的单词或括号内单词的正确形式。

Anhui, an ancient and beautiful region, began to prosper during the Tang (618—907) and Song (960—1279) dynasties. In the times 56 the Grand Canal, a UNESCO World Heritage site, directly connected Beijing in the north and Hangzhou in the south, Anhui traders 57 (fan) out across China. That's why Anhui food is now among China's eight great cuisines.

Anhui cuisine offers plenty of other options and many dishes have interesting stories, for example, chouguiyu. It is said that a certain businessman had made 58 fortune in Hangzhou, where he had first tasted a kind of fish that was sweet, fresh and had few tiny bones. He 59 (immediate) thought of his elderly parents. He bought some to bring to them. However, the long journey took its toll(毁坏) on the fish and when he finally reached home, they were all 60 (smell). His mother, an economical woman, decided to cook the fish nevertheless. To everyone's surprise, the fish smelled bad 61 tasted very good. These days, Anhui chefs deliberately allow the fish to reach certain 62 (ripe) before cooking it.

Anhui cuisine 63 (characterise) by its heavy use of oil, deeply flavored sauces, and superior soups and stock. The main cooking style is to braise(炖) or roast. Its chefs specialize 64 ingredients available locally, such as fish, pigeons, bamboo shoots, etc. Anhui folk also like to salt their own meats like ham and pork, which goes into the pot with chicken and duck to produce very deeply flavored soups. A popular dish is salted meat on a bed of bamboo shoots 65 (steam) on a wooden cutting board. Unlike some other regional cuisines, this is one cooking style that is very heavy on animal protein and relatively light on the greens.

第四部分 写作(共两节,满分40分)

第一节(满分15分)

假定你是皖南八中校英文报《先锋》(Pioneer)编辑,受你校学生会委托撰写一份以珍爱湿地(Treasure Wetland)为主题的海报设计大赛通知。内容包括:1. 大赛目的;2. 作品要求;3. 参赛方式等。

注意:1. 写作词数应为80左右;2. 可适当补充细节,使行文流畅。

第二节(满分25分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

The city circle was quiet when my van pulled up to Two's Company café. It was 8:00 A. M., and the mom-and-pop businesses wouldn't be open for another three hours. As the film crew of student movie-makers hopped out of the van and started unloading a ton of equipment, I sat in the driver's seat reading a book.

I learned a long time ago that I was not wanted or needed on the set. Sometimes, that made me feel a bit sad. These kids used to need a parent's advice, help and caring. Now, as older teens, they were making their own decisions, helping each other and supporting their friends through whatever assignments they were given.

Emptied of its movie-related contents, the van now became the place to leave personal items. My job, as the driver, was to stay within calling distance with the keys so that if anything was needed I could open the van. Knowing that I could crawl(爬行) into a corner somewhere and finish reading the book that a friend asked me to critique, I looked for a place to sit down. Against a wall, in the shade, just twenty or so paces away, I spied a beautifully carved park bench. I noticed that a man was sitting on one end, but there was plenty of room for at least two more bodies. Walking over, I set my drink on the ground near the leg of the bench and sat on the end seat so that I could rest my elbow(肘) on the arm. The man on the other end looked at me oddly but remained seated.

I quickly discovered that he'd probably spent the night on the bench. His clothes were untidy, his hair was messy, and I was soon confronted(使……面对) with a strong and very unpleasant smell of body sweat. I looked at him and smiled, and he smiled back with a mouth of misshapen and blacked-out teeth. That was it. He wasn't bothering me, and I guessed I wasn't bothering him. We both sat there for over an hour. I was reading. He was intently watching the filming.

注意:

1. 所续写短文的词数应为150左右;
2. 续写部分分为两段,每段的开头语已为你写好。

He then stood. _____

I was shocked. _____

参考答案、解析及评分细则

听力部分录音稿

例如：现在，你有5秒钟的时间看试卷上的例题。

你将听到以下内容：

M: Excuse me, can you tell me how much the shirt is?

W: Yes, it's nine fifteen.

你将有5秒钟的时间将正确答案标在试卷上。衬衫的价格为9磅15 便士，所以你选择C项，并将其标在试卷上。现在，你有5 秒钟的时间阅读第1 小节的有关内容。

Text 1

M: Hello, there. Can I help you with your bags?

W: Sure. I have a couple more up in the room. Can you look after them and call me a taxi please?

M: Certainly, ma'am.

Text 2

W: Luke, hurry up! The school bus will be arriving in 5 minutes. You can't miss it or you'll be late for the exam today.

M: It's OK, mom. The driver knows it, so he will make sure everybody is on board.

Text 3

M: Good afternoon, Park Dental Associates. Can I help you?

W: Good afternoon. I'd like to see Doctor Bryant at 9 a. m. on Friday, please!

M: I'm sorry, Doctor Bryant's schedule is full on that day. Can I fit you in on Saturday?

W: Yes, that's fine.

Text 4

W: Bring your umbrella to work today. It looks like there is going to be a storm.

M: I have my raincoat in the car, so I am not worried.

W: OK, but also remember to drive slowly if it starts to rain.

Text 5

M: How was your trip? Is everything all right?

W: We waited for a long time before the plane took off, and the seat made me uncomfortable. Now, I just want to go to my bed and get some rest.

Text 6

W: I'd like a ticket to the fair, please.

M: OK. This is an entrance ticket only. If you'd like to go to the petting zoo or the horse ride, there will be an extra fee.

W: How much do those cost?

M: The petting zoo is $2, and the horse ride is $3.

W: I'll buy a ticket to the petting zoo as well, please.

M: Your total comes to $7.

W: Do you take credit cards?

M: No, we take cash only.

W: Okay, here you go.

Text 7

W: How's your French coming along? Are you still practicing daily?

M: Yeah, one hour a day. It's improved from greetings to basic conversations.

W: Great! Could you recommend any apps?

M: Well, there's one named "En Provence". And I listen to local news sometimes, but nothing beats chatting with people at the local French cafe.

W: And it is handy in France too, right?

M: Absolutely. By engaging myself in the culture, I'll truly become a part of the local community. It's important to have a genuine experience rather than just being a tourist

W: That sounds amazing. I'm planning to visit Paris next year too. Maybe I should start learning French as well.

M: Definitely!

Text 8

W: Hello. My name is Christina. I'm just stopping by to bring you some cookies and introduce myself.

M: Hi, Christina. I'm Bryce. It's very nice to meet you. Please come in.

W: Sure.

M: Thank you for the cookies. Would you like something to drink?

W: Water is fine. Thank you.

M: Here you go. Take a seat. So, where were you living before?

W: My husband and I were living in Nebraska, but he got a job out here, so that's why we moved. I've never been to the West Coast before. I love Washington so far.

M: I've been in Washington for ten years now. I was born in Texas and came here for college. I've stayed ever since.

W: What do you do for work?

M: I'm a computer programmer. It's a good job, but my real passion in life is making furniture.

W: That's interesting. I do a lot of painting in my spare time, although I'm a banker during the day.

Text 9

W: Hello, this is Pamela. I'd like to see the apartment you advertised.

M: Hello, Pamela. I'm free whenever you come.

W: Sounds good. Oh, I'm satisfied with the pictures you put up there, but I think I'd better have a look.

M: Of course. The former renter just moved out yesterday, so I haven't cleaned it yet.

W: The house I live in now is due in ten days.

M: In that case, I will have the room cleaned tomorrow afternoon.

W: Great. By the way, are there any shopping centers nearby?

M: Yes, it's about five minutes' walk. Underground and bus station are quite near, too.

W: Cool. Is the house well-furnished? And is that in good condition?

M: Yeah. And I will check all the equipment before you move in.

W: Thank you very much. You know, it's annoying if something often breaks.

M: Don't worry, madam.

W: OK. I'll call you later.

Text 10

W: On September 16th, 2021, a group of "ordinary" people blasted off into space on the first space mission with no professional astronauts. The mission, called Inspiration 4, was the idea of a billionaire Jared Isaacman, who paid the company SpaceX to arrange the flight. He's a pilot who has flown different kinds of airplanes. Mr. Isaacman decided to use the trip to raise money for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Haley Arceneaux, 29, was a cancer patient at St. Jude when she was a child. Ms. Arceneaux works at St. Jude as a physician's assistant, helping patients and assisting doctors. She is the youngest American to fly into orbit.

The capsule has room for four crew members. Mr. Isaacman's company held a contest to fill one of the spots. The position was won by Dr. Sian Proctor, a college professor who was nearly chosen as a NASA astronaut in 2009. The Inspiration 4 mission orbited 360 miles (575 km) above the Earth. That was about 93 miles higher than the International Space Station.

He then stood. He walked straight in front of me and bowed. I looked up, not knowing what was going to happen next. In a slightly shaky but clear voice, he said, “Thank you.” I tilted my head, examining his dusty face and cracked lips. “For what?” I questioned. He looked at the ground as he whispered, “Usually people won’t even look at me, let alone sit by me. Thank you for treating me like a human being.” I honestly didn’t know what to say as he turned, picked up a small, dirty backpack, and walked quickly around the corner.

I was shocked. I hadn’t done anything spectacular; I just shared a bench. After several seconds of inner turmoil, I unexpectedly realized that my actions had truly meant something to this soiled and beaten-down man. To me, he was just someone who wanted a place to sit out of the sun. That’s exactly what I had wanted. We were no different no matter who we were, what we did in our lives or where we lay our heads at night. Both of us just wanted to be treated like a human being. Love and kindness are never wasted. They always make a difference. They bless the one who receives them, and they bless you, the giver.
