A man called Jamaal Allan has revealed how his name has led to him being racially stereotyped (种族歧视) throughout his life.

Jamaal, a high school teacher who grew up in southern Oregon of the USA, revealed that most people he meets are always surprised when they discover he's white. He said that one of the most common responses to his name is "I never would've guessed your name was Jamaal". In a blog post he aired his thoughts on this, writing: "Really, are you frequently good at guessing people's names?" Another reaction to his name, he said, is "you don't look like a Jamaal", to which he asked in response, "And how exactly does one look like a name?"

He wrote in the blog that some people, after meeting him, say "I thought you'd be..." and then pause with "a sudden realization they are on the verge of sounding racist", before finding a word such as "taller" or "older" to end the sentence with.

And his name once appeared to get him selected for a random security check on a trip to London in 2002, as the others picked out by officials were called Muhammad, Abdul and Tariq. He also explained that waitresses and waiters usually hand his credit card back to a black person at his table when he's dining out.

His name, which means "beauty" in Arabic, landed him his teaching job in Iowa, though. Jamaal said, "The principal who had hired me admitted that I was lucky to have gotten the job. They had not been planning to take another student-teacher when my application showed up. But, as they scanned through it and saw a Jamaal who plays basketball and counts Muhammad Ali among his heroes, they thought they 'could use a little diversity,'" said Jamaal.

Jamaal's dad was a fan of the Los Angeles Lakers basketball team and he was just named after one of their players, Jamaal Wilkes.

But it is not tasty food like avocado, fast fashion or even travel abroad that's holding a generation back from achieving those traditional milestones – and we finally have some evidence to prove it. In fact, those aged 18 to 30 are more likely to be savers than any other age group, according to new research. Far from being wasteful, an overwhelming 84% of these young people are trying to save.

The real problem lies in the fact that younger people tend to have higher expense when spending on essentials compared to our older counterparts (对应的人) – and that house prices are at an all-time high.

The research also finds that nearly half (47%) of 18 to 30-year-olds have "low financial resilience" – they have little capacity to pay bills in the event of a financial shock.

Not many people have an emergency fund even though it is essential. It will become your financial buffer (缓冲) in case something unexpected occurs. 36 You can one day tell yourself you'll finally start saving up, but with the bills you need to pay and the other needs you must consider, your plan might fail. Here are a few aspects for you to consider when you wish to succeed in saving your rainy day fund.

Usually, it is suggested that you save a total of three to six months' worth of expenses. 37 And if you get overwhelmed by the amount you need to save, you might become discouraged and fail. To settle the issue, forget about that suggestion. You should decide how much you want to save initially. For instance, you can just start with one month's worth of expenses. 38

Budgeting is also important if you want to be financially healthy. Note what expenses are non-negotiable, such as your living expenses and food. 39 It's not bad to spoil yourself sometimes, as long as the price is reasonable relative to your current financial situation.

40 For instance, those who wish to pursue higher education will need to budget and save up for their school expenses. Even if they go to an affordable educational institution, other school-related expenses can still be quite a lot. So, knowing how to budget will help them survive school without falling much into debt.

- A. Therefore, you need to find a way to deal with it.
- B. Budgeting can help improve your academic performance.
- C. And when you achieve that, then you can set a higher goal.
- D. However, saving an emergency fund is easier said than done.
- E. Set aside some money for some non-essential expenses as well.
- F. But it's not that easy to set aside such a huge amount all of a sudden.
- G. Learning how to budget will be useful in other areas of your life as well.

Jules had just spent another six hours helping her grandmother picking peaches. After school summer holiday began, she was sent to this farmland at her grandma's house, picking and canning fruit for two weeks. She used to spend her holidays and have lots of fun here every year, enjoying horse-riding, looking at animals at daytime and appreciating fireflies (萤火虫) at night. But since her grandpa died six years earlier, Jules hadn't visited the farm.

Now Jules opened her phone again, praying for bars (手机信号), but there was nothing. She felt frustrated and bored. Looking out of the window, Jules saw nothing but the large farmland and the small forest between Grandma and her neighbor's farmland. She felt even more bored.

The large corn field outside was rent by a fat and ugly-looking man now. After Grandpa died, Grandma just worked in her garden and mainly grew vegetables and fruits. When she needed other food, she just bought it in town twice a month. Jules had asked Grandma if she felt lonely here, the answer was NO. "I've got all I need right here. Your grandpa is still with me, in my heart, and this land is all I have ever known," Grandma said.

After Grandma went to bed at night, Jules decided to read her novel a bit before bed. Two pages into her reading, Jules heard something outside the window. Walking close to the window, Jules looked out and found a boy about her age standing down there in the moonlight. With a flashlight under his face, the boy was holding his finger over his lips. He motioned (示意) for Jules to come outside. She shook her head, feeling slightly nervous, but the boy just kept motioning. Then, Jules decided that anything would be more interesting than bed and she got out of the house quietly.

My Most Memorable Day

Among so many special days in my life, I would like to share one of my birthdays.

That day I failed the English exam at school and arrived home sorrowfully. When I found my mom had prepared a grand dinner for my birthday celebration, a feeling of guilty came to my mind with my eyes in tears. Not knowing what happened, Mom just came over and hugged me. After I poured out my frustration, mom gently comforted me, saying that it was my dedicated attempt, instead of the exam result, that valued most.

I was encouraged by Mom's words and learned that all I needed was just devotion to my work. How meaningful a lesson and what a memorable day!
