第二部分 阅读（共两节，满分 50 分）第一节（共 15 小题；每小题 2.5 分，满分 37.5 分）

阅读下列短文，从每题所给的 A、B、C、D 四个选项中选出最佳选项。

AWhistler Travel Guide

Snow-capped peaks and powdered steeps; sparkling lakes and rushing waterfalls; challenging hiking routes and inviting restaurants — Whistler's offerings suit every season.

Things to do

The entire town displays the ski-chic atmosphere, hosting dozens of ski and snowboard competitions and festivals annually. In the warmer months, more outdoor enthusiasts come out to play. Visitors can try hiking or cycling up the mountains. While Whistler is an ideal vacation spot for the active types, other travelers can enjoy the local museums and art galleries filled with informative exhibits. Plus, there are family-friendly activities and attractions like summer concerts, along with plenty of shopping options.

When to visit

The best times to visit Whistler are from June through August and between December and March.

How to get around

The best ways to get around Whistler are on foot or by bike. Or, you can take the shuttle buses from Whistler Village, which transport visitors to Lost Lake Park and the Marketplace. Meanwhile, having a car will allow you the freedom to explore top attractions like Whistler Train Wreck and Alexander Falls without having to spend a lot of cash on a cab.

- Whistler receives feet of snow each year. If you're driving in winter, slow down and make sure to rent or come with a reliable SUV.
- Snowslides are likely to occur on Backcountry routes, so only advanced skiers should take to this off-the-map area.
- Whistler's wilderness is home to many black and grizzly bears. Keep your distance and do not feed them.

21. What are active travelers recommended to do in Whistler?
- A. Bike up the mountains. B. Host ski competitions.
C. Go shopping at the malls. D. Visit museum exhibitions.
22. Which of the following is the most popular among travelers?
- A. Whistler Village. B. Lost Lake Park.
C. The Marketplace. D. Whistler Train Wreck.
23. What are travelers prohibited from doing in Whistler?
- A. Driving a rented SUV. B. Feeding grizzly bears.
C. Exploring the wilderness. D. Skiing on Backcountry routes.

B

I used to believe that only words could catch the essence of the human soul. The literary works contained such distinct stories that they shaped the way we saw the world. Words were what composed the questions we sought to uncover and the answers to those questions themselves. Words were everything.

That belief changed.

In an ordinary math class, my teacher posed a simple question: What's 0.99 rounded to the nearest whole number? Easy. When rounded to the nearest whole number, $0.99 = 1$. Somehow, I thought even though 0.99 is only 0.01 away from 1, there's still a 0.01 difference. That means even if two things are only a little different, they are still different, so doesn't that make them completely different?

My teacher answered my question by presenting another equation (等式): $1 = 0.\dot{9}$, which could also be expressed as $1 = 0.999999\dots$ repeating itself without ever ending.

There was something mysterious but fascinating about the equation. The left side was unchangeable, objective: it contained a number that ended. On the right was something endless, a number repeating itself limitless times. Yet, somehow, these two opposed things were connected by an equal sign.

Lying in bed, I thought about how much the equation paralleled our existence. The left side of the equation represents that sometimes life itself is so unchangeable and so clear. The concrete, whole number of the day when you were born and the day when you would die. But then there is that gap in between life and death. The right side means a time and space full of limitless possibilities, and endless opportunities into the open future.

A decline in wonder is not unavoidable. Keil reminds us that we can accept wonder as a desirable positive quality that exists in everyone. I value wonder deeply, and Wonder has given me hope by proposing a future for my children that will remain wonder-full.

28. What is a common problem among fourth graders?
A. They upset their parents too often. B. They ask too many strange questions.
C. Their love for fun disappears quickly. D. Their desire to learn declines sharply.
29. What can be inferred about children's causal mechanisms in paragraph 4?
A. They control children's sensitivity.
B. They slightly change in early childhood.
C. They hardly support children's reasoning.
D. They develop through children's questioning.
30. How can parents support children's ongoing wonder according to Keil?
A. By monitoring their games. B. By welcoming inquiring minds.
C. By estimating their abilities. D. By providing reasonable conclusions.
31. What is the text?
A. A book review. B. A news report. C. A research paper. D. A children's story.

D

Each year, the world loses about 10 million hectares of forest — an area about the size of Iceland — because of cutting down trees. At that rate, some scientists predict the world's forests could disappear in 100 to 200 years. To handle it, now researchers at Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) have pioneered a technique to generate wood-like plant materials in a lab. This makes it possible to “grow” a wooden product without cutting down trees.

In the lab, the researchers first take cells from the leaves of a young plant. These cells are cultured in liquid medium for two days, then moved to another medium which contains nutrients and two different hormones (激素). By adjusting the hormone levels, the researchers can tune the physical and mechanical qualities of the cells. Next, the researchers use a 3D printer to shape the cell-based material, and let the shaped material grow in the dark for three months. Finally, the researchers dehydrate (使脱水) the material, and then evaluate its qualities.

They found that lower hormone levels lead to plant materials with more rounded, open cells of lower density (密度), while higher hormone levels contribute to the growth of plant materials with smaller but denser cell structures. Lower or higher density of cell structures makes the plant materials softer or more rigid, helping the materials grow with different wood-like characteristics. What's more, it's to be noted that the research process is about 100 times faster than the time it takes for a tree to grow to maturity!

Research of this kind is ground-breaking. “This work demonstrates the great power of a technology,” says lead researcher, Jeffrey Berenstain. “The real opportunity here is to be at its best with what you use and how you use it. This technology can be tuned to meet the requirements you give about shapes, sizes, rigidity, and forms. It enables us to ‘grow’ any wooden product in a way that traditional agricultural methods can't achieve.”

- A. Both types of art take skills to make
- B. Photographs preserve faces of folks from long ago
- C. Grasping abstract art demands more artistic training
- D. Both ways of creating art have their own value and beauty
- E. In contrast, abstract art focuses less on realistic appearances
- F. Artworks like this tell stories about history and everyday life
- G. Artists have the freedom to go beyond real-life representations

Last year, I started the journey of being a remote product designer. The thought of a 41 schedule, a comfortable home office, and the escape from the crowded public transport was incredibly 42. The first few weeks were filled with a long-lost feeling of 43.

However, the 44 of working from home gradually set in. I had started my day with the best intentions, promising myself quick breaks and regular 45. But deadlines, endless emails, and virtual meetings 46 me to my computer throughout the day, leaving me little time to 47. Gone were the short walks to a colleague's desk and the quick lunchtime walks around the office complex. Finally, my world was 48 to the walls of my home, my steps 49 in mere meters rather than kilometers.

One day, I tried 50 one of my favorite dresses and it wasn't passing through my waist at all. Glancing at myself in the mirror, I saw a 51 person carrying extra weight, rather than someone enjoying freedom. The 52 of work and personal life had left me feeling like I was a never-ending motion machine.

This incident marked the 53 of a journey of self-discovery. I made up my mind that I needed a(n) 54, not just for my waistline but for my overall well-being. It was a promise to prioritize my physical and mental health, and a commitment that I could 55 control over my life and my body.

第二节 (满分25分)

阅读下面材料, 根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段, 使之构成一篇完整的短文。

In our weekly staff meeting, our editor Ashley was not pleased with the quality of our reporting. "Our readership is way down. We need better stories for this Thursday's school newspaper. Does anybody have any ideas?" she said.

I handed her my article about our basketball team beating Deerfield High School the previous night by one point. "Sports stories are fun," she said, "but not good enough for the front page. We need something to really get people's attention."

After our meeting, we left the newsroom together and heard someone screaming, "Perry is missing!" Perry was a big red parrot and had been our school mascot (吉祥物) for ten years. He played an important role in students' lives, both in and out of class. He had also been a constant presence at school events, inspiring a sense of unity among students.

Everyone gathered around Perry's empty cage, heartbroken. Suddenly, a student from the crowd came over and showed me a photo. "You're a reporter for the school paper, right? I happened to take this yesterday," he said. In the photo was a Deerfield High School basketball player with something large hidden under his shirt around the size of a parrot.

"He must have stolen Perry to get back at us for winning the game!" Ashley cried. We hurried back to the newsroom, agreeing to run the photo on the front page with the headline "Deerfield Stole Perry." "This is just the story we need. Everyone will read it," Ashley said confidently.

After she left, I took a closer look at the photo. The clock in the background read 4:15 pm, but our game against Deerfield hadn't started until 4:30 pm. Why would the boy have taken Perry before we even played? An uneasy feeling came over me that we might have falsely accused someone.

I went to Perry's usual caretaker to ask if he knew Perry was missing. "He's not missing. He's retired. He's ready for some quieter days," he said. Learning the truth, I immediately told Ashley and suggested writing a story to say goodbye to Perry.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

To my surprise, Ashley insisted on reporting the "Deerfield Stole Perry" story.

On Thursday, the paper came out with the headline "Bye-Bye, Perry" on the front page.

参考范文一

Hello, everyone! Our group believes that online voting is a fantastic idea to select the top ten campus singers.

Firstly, it's important to acknowledge that online voting is convenient and accessible to everyone. With just a few clicks on a computer or a smartphone, we can easily cast votes to support our favourite singers. Besides, online voting allows for a wider reach and engagement, breaking down the boundaries of physical locations and enabling more people to participate in the voting process.

Overall, we think online voting is a convenient and inclusive means for choosing the top ten campus singers. Thank you for listening! (97 词)

参考范文二

Hello, everyone! Though online voting is widely used, its drawbacks are undeniable. Let me share our concerns about using it to select the top ten campus singers.

Firstly, not all of us have access to the Internet or electronic devices, so the voting result can not reflect the true preferences of the entire student community. Besides, cheating is a significant concern. Contestants may create multiple accounts to vote for themselves or ask for votes from acquaintances. In this way, the voting result fails to show the contestants' vocal abilities and stage performance.

Overall, while online voting has its benefits, we should also guarantee the fairness and reliability of the contest. Thank you for listening! (108 词)

第二节

To my surprise, Ashley insisted on reporting the "Deerfield Stole Perry" story. "This is the very story we need to attract more readers," she argued. To convince her, I defended that if we wrote this article, we would be telling a lie. Noticing her hesitant expression, I further explained the potential harm it would cause to the player and our paper's reputation. After some discussion, Ashley finally gave in, "OK, let's try with real stories." Then I went to gather all the necessary information to write an article about Perry and the precious memories we shared over the years. (87词)

On Thursday, the paper came out with the headline "Bye-Bye, Perry" on the front page. Soon, it sparked heated discussions among students about Perry. Many were disappointed with Perry's sudden departure, but were comforted by the fact that he was in good care. The story also evoked sweet memories of Perry. Some students even requested to share their stories of him in our paper! Seeing the story's success, Ashley came to me and said sincerely, "You are right! It's a good story." Her words brought me a great sense of fulfillment. Indeed, true stories might not always draw attention, but they have the power to touch and connect. (93词)
