第一节 (共 15 小题；每小题 2.5 分，满分 37.5 分)

阅读下列短文，从每题所给的 A、B、C、D 四个选项中选出最佳选项。

A

Four most beautiful villages in Italy

Alberobello

Set in the area of Puglia, close to the coastal town of Bari, this village is famous for its beautiful trulli, which are conical (圆锥形的) roof structures made without any mortar (砂浆). The large amount of trulli makes Alberobello truly unique. You can even stay in one of these houses when visiting the village.

Menaggio

Set in the province of Como, right on the western shore of Lake Como, the area is frequently visited for its Menaggio and Cadenabbia Golf Club founded in 1907. This beautiful village still keeps its old attractiveness, with beautiful surroundings that could be enjoyed from one of the many waterfront balconies.

Matera

Matera is in the area of Basilicata. Known as the city of stones, Matera is one of the most ancient and unique towns in the world, having some of the earliest examples of houses carved in the rock. It's more a village than a town though, and there are churches in the caves found here. In the surrounding Apulia area, you can also find other medieval (中世纪的) churches like the Matera Cathedral or the San Pietro Caveoso.

Portofino

The harbor village of Portofino, set in the province of Genoa, offers access to several cozy beaches nearby, which is why this medieval village has been transformed into a pretty vacation site. Having anything from old landmarks to designer stores, this village is the perfect place to enjoy the finest things in life. You could also visit an underwater statue of Christ.

21. What is Alberobello noted for?

My interest in conquering the Seven Summits ( 顶峰 ) first began after I climbed Kilimanjaro in 1999. Back then at the age of 18, I never saw climbing all the Seven Summits as a realistic goal, but I certainly thought it would be fun to try to do some of the easier ones.

Four years later, I got a new job and I found myself considering Mt. Elbrus. What inspired me about this trip was not necessarily Mt. Elbrus itself, but that the Caucasus region had several tiny countries that I could easily backpack in a single trip. To me, Elbrus would simply be an added bonus. Since the climb would only take a week, it left me with plenty of exploring time for other countries. In the summer of 2006, I was able to get the time I needed off and had a successful climb of Mt. Elbrus.

A year later in 2007, I noticed that I began to think about Cerro Aconcagua a lot, and even dream about it. My desire to try another one of the Seven Summits began to get so strong that I worried I might start losing sleep at night. Finally I talked to my boss Tom who was surprisingly supportive and helped give me the time off I would need for Aconcagua.

In February 2008, I had a successful experience and climbed the second highest of the Seven Summits. I somehow devoted myself to training several days a week, and took climbing courses. In June 2009, I climbed what I once thought was impossible, Denali, the second hardest of the Seven Summits. In 2011, I continued towards my dream by reaching the top of Oceania after conquering Carstensz Pyramid. At this point, there is no doubt that I am able to climb Mt. Vinson Massif so my only unknown is Mt. Everest. I'd like to try Vinson Massif next.

24. When did the author climb Kilimanjaro successfully?

A. In 1999.

A. Devoted and humorous.

B. Talented and clever.

C. Stubborn and demanding.

D. Brave and successful.

27. What does the author want to tell us? B

A. The early bird catches the worm.

B. Difficult the first time, easy the second.

C. Nothing is impossible to a determined heart.

"Hello!" You type into the chat box. There's a slight feeling of excitement flowing through your fingers, and you can't wait for a reply. You think, "There's probably nothing more exciting than this."

With communication from all corners of the world possible at the ease of your fingers, we are now witness to an advanced form of the hand shake and physical conversations: online friendships.

Alarmingly, according to Internet Safety 101, almost half of young adult users have received upsetting messages, with 92 percent posting their own real names and identification online and 58 percent thinking it doesn't cause concern. And though some parents may be biting their fingernails in fear right now, more than half of the youth have admitted to making their friends online and a good majority regularly text them.

Though the statistics are daunting, we hope, we haven't scared you off! Researchers actually found that pursuing online friendships could be beneficial. Penn State University reported that this was especially the case for those with social anxiety, as they might form a stronger comfort bond with their peers (同龄人) through the screen rather than a face-to-face meeting.

Additionally, online interaction may increase your self-confidence. In our current situation of isolation (隔离), perhaps that perfect connection from the safety of our homes is all it takes to make things just a little more bearable.

In the end, it all depends on you. Whether or not your search for a friend bears fruit lies in your approach, and though I'm not a great relationship master, I have some tips that will aid you in your exploration for the "BFF" of your dreams.

28. What can we infer from the third paragraph?

- A. The youth often meet online friends in reality.
- B. Most Internet users like texting to their online friends.
- C. Many parents like biting fingernails when worried.
- D. Most young adults lack awareness of Internet safety.

29. Which can replace the underlined word "daunting" in Paragraph 4?

30. What's the author's attitude to making friends on the Internet?

- A. Objective.
- B. Supportive.
- C. Negative.
- D. Unclear.

31. What do you think the text will talk about next?

- C. How to keep in touch with online friends.
- D. How to benefit from dream online friends.

D

An innovative agriculture startup plans to open an indoor vertical farm in Compton to help bring fresh produce to the California city.

Plenty, the company behind the project, said it will condense (压缩) 700 acres of farmland into a 95,000 square foot warehouse in Los Angeles County, where food-bearing plants will grow vertically and in abundance. The Compton site will be the company's second and largest vertical farm. Plenty opened its first vertical farm in San Francisco in 2018, and keeps a research and development farm in Laramie, Wyoming.

By building farms vertically, Plenty said it is able to grow healthy, quality produce without harming the environment. The unique layout will also make it possible to establish farms in urban areas, where land resources are limited and food insecurity is widespread.

Plenty uses a range of technologies to realize its goal of more productive and Earth-friendly farming — including vertical plant towers, LED lighting and robots to plant, feed and harvest crops. "The farms are able to grow plants faster, with greater nutritional density (密度), and without the help of pesticides," the company said. To create them, the company said it does not clear lands or pollute grounds, and only uses a small part of the water that traditional farming requires.

"It's good for the environment," said Shireen Santosham, Plenty's head of strategic initiatives. "Eighty to ninety percent of water used around the world is for agriculture. Because we grow our plants using precise nutrient recipes, we can use a very small amount of water."

Traditional farms are usually only able to harvest crops a few times a year. But because Plenty's farms are free of limitations like seasonal and weather changes, harmful pests and natural disasters, they can produce food all year long.

The company said it also prioritizes health and cleanliness. Its crops are grown in clean environments, where staff dress in full personal protective equipment and robots do much of the picking. The first time produce is touched by bare hands is when a consumer opens a food package at home. Plenty said it's all part of its mission "to improve the lives of Plants, People and our Planet."

32. Where did Plenty open its first vertical farm?

- A. In California.
- B. In Los Angeles.
- C. In Laramie.
- D. In San Francisco.

33. What can we know about the company Plenty?

- A. It is similar to traditional farms.
- B. Its farms are influenced by weather.
- C. It uses less water to grow crops year-round.
- D. It kills harmful pests with the help of pesticides.

34. What can we infer from the last paragraph?

- A. Plenty's produce are safe to eat.
- B. Robots do all of the picking on the farm.
- C. Plenty's produce are popular with consumers.
- D. The produce is delivered directly to consumers' home.

35. What's the best title for the text?

- A. The Necessity of Developing Vertical Agriculture
- B. How to Grow Healthy and Fresh Produce in Urban Cities
- C. A Vertical Farm Aims to Bring Fresh Produce to Compton
- D. Plenty's Task Is to Improve the Lives of Plants and People

阅读下面短文,从短文后的选项中选出可以填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

News of the upcoming English Talent Show aroused the interest of my roommates and inspired us to perform. 36 First, we chose the drama The Villains Lair (恶人谷), featuring the most iconic Disney villains as they plot their revenge (复仇). We wrote our script based on The Villains Lair, added amusing lines into the story and named it Villains' Tea Party. In the play, Godzilla comes to a tea party uninvited and guests try to decide whether the character is a villain. 37 We also drew inspiration from the animated film, Wreck-It Ralph 2.

We designed the settings and made most of the stage props (道具) by ourselves. 38 We even woke up early to rehearse (排练) acting onstage. Of course, we couldn't avoid arguing during the preparation over the lines and acting style. Thanks to our outspoken personalities, we dealt with many problems directly.

In fact, we thought we would be very nervous when we stood onstage, but we weren't. Though we carelessly broke a glass when we set the stage, we still completed the performance in a relaxing and calm way. 39 We had great success. Through this activity, we experienced the strength of cooperation and learned how to overcome difficulties. 40

- A. A lot of humorous situations follow.
- B. One of our favorite plays was about friendship.
- C. We spent many evening classes secretly practicing.
- D. We were together, and we teamed up with each other.
- E. Most importantly, the experience will shine in our lives.
- F. We started to discuss how to prepare for our English play.
- G. As a stage manager, I had to make sure everything went well.

第二节 (满分25分)

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Navratri (九夜节) was almost here! Deepa couldn't wait for the party in the dance hall. She'd wear her special two-piece dress with tiny bells on it. She'd jump and skip just to hear those bells jingle (响).

"I think you should try it on," Mom said, handing Deepa the skirt. "You've grown a lot this year. It may not fit."

Deepa stepped into her skirt and tried pulling it up. Mom made a worried expression and said, "It's too small. Try the blouse." But that was small, too.

Deepa's throat tightened. Last year, Deepa and Mom had flown to India to visit Deepa's aunt, or Masi, for Navratri. Masi had taken Deepa shopping for a holiday dress. Deepa had loved the way the bells on Masi's anklets jingled as they walked through the market. When Deepa found a dress that jingled, too, she cried, "That one!"

For nine nights, she and her aunt had laughed and danced in the village with their skirts. And now the dress no longer fit.

"Can we have it changed?" Deepa asked. "We can try," said Mom. But when the tailor looked at the dress, he shook his head. He said it could only be made smaller. That afternoon, Deepa and her mom went to an Indian store in the mall and picked out a dress covered with little mirrors. It didn't feel special. But it fit. Deepa tried getting into the holiday spirit as they drove to the Navratri party. But her dress was too quiet.

In the parking lot, Mom opened the car trunk to put away her bag. Deepa noticed a familiar bag. "Is that my dress?" she asked. "I forgot to put it away," Mom said, closing the trunk. No one would ever see it again. Deepa thought sadly.

As they neared the dance hall, Deepa heard drums beating and people laughing. Inside, hundreds of dancers clacked (旋转) colorful sticks together in a circle. The room felt warm and alive.

A lady danced past and her little girl followed, jumping along holding sticks tied with bells. Deepa smiled. It was like watching herself with Masi. Later, paper plates thick with sauce (酱汁) were served.

注意:

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右;
2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

The girl squeezed past Deepa, carrying a plate.

Deepa touched Mom's arm and whispered, "I can help her."

The girl squeezed past Deepa, carrying a plate. "Be careful, Sylvie," the lady warned. Suddenly, someone ran into Sylvie. Deepa cried, "Watch out!" But it was too late. Sauce splashed onto Sylvie's skirt, which was ruined completely. "My favorite dress!" Sylvie cried loudly, who couldn't believe her eyes and refused to take off her dress. Hearing the words "my favorite dress", Deepa was lost in thought.

Deepa touched Mom's arm and whispered, "I can help her." They hurried to the car. Deepa took out her dress, and the bells jingled in the wind. She carried it into the hall and handed it to Sylvie carefully. "I want you to have this. This used to be my favorite dress. You may like it." "I love it! Thank you!" Sylvie said happily. After changing into the dress, she hugged Deepa and offered her the jingle sticks. Deepa laughed as they jumped, skipped, and twirled their way into the dance circle. Navratri was more fun with a little jingle and a new friend.
